It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

THE VISIONS OF HENRY I (cont.). THE KING'S PERILOUS RETURN TO ENGLAND
(MS. Corp. Chri. Coll., Oxon. clvii, fo. 383.)

PREFACE

THE composite work, the Chronicon ex Chronicis of Florence of Worcester with its Continuation, has not been fortunate in the matter of editions, although for the greater part of the work several MSS. of good authority are known to exist. It is, however, the Continuation, and especially its narrative for the period 1128–41,¹ which has shown to most disadvantage as the result of indifferent editing. Briefly, the history of the printed text of the Chronicle is as follows:—

In 1592 Lord William Howard of Naworth was prevailed upon to edit a manuscript of Florence then in his possession. This text, which is an early copy and of good authority, Howard printed in full to its conclusion sub ann. 1138. But, thinking his manuscript defective in the Continuation, he supplemented its readings with extensive extracts from a second manuscript, alleged to be a copy of Florence's chronicle, which was placed at his disposal by the Kentish historian William Lambarde. From the annual of 1138 where his own MS. concluded, Howard copied Lambarde's MS. verbatim to its end sub ann. 1141. The resulting work was the Editio Princeps of the Chronicle.² In addition to many errors of transcription, Howard's edition contained, in the text of the Continuation, a number of interpolations derived from Lambarde's manuscript, which are not to be found in any other extant MS. of Florence earlier in date than the sixteenth century. The two manuscripts used by Howard, which are now in the library of Trinity College, Dublin, are described in detail below. The edition of 1592 was faultily reprinted at Frankfort in 1601.³

PREFACE

What is at present the standard edition of Florence's chronicle appeared next, in 1848, edited for the English Historical Society by Mr. Benjamin Thorpe.¹ For the pre-Conquest portion of the narrative this editor followed, with some omissions, the text of Florence prepared by Mr. Petrie for the Monumenta Historica Britannica, the publication of which had been delayed until that year;² for the period 1066–1127 Mr. Thorpe appears to have used as his main authority the text of an important manuscript of Florence in the library of Corpus Christi College, Oxford; after that date, however, he preferred to follow for the most part the version of Howard's edition, retaining without comment its faulty and conflicting narrative, though adapting it, in places, to the superior chronology of the Corpus MS.

The result is that the text of the Continuation as it stands in the principal edition, so far from being the homogeneous record of any single manuscript, is really a not over-skilful blend of the work of at least three different hands, in which much has been omitted that is the work of the true Continuator, yet much retained that indubitably is not.

It is hardly surprising therefore that historians generally should have depreciated the historical value of the Continuator's narrative and that Mr. Round should be able to write:³ 'The Continuator muddled in inextricable confusion the events of 1138 and 1139,' treating his chronology throughout with scant consideration. A brief inspection of the three manuscripts concerned will hardly warrant such an attitude. They are as follows:—

(i) MS., Trinity Coll., Dublin, No. 502, E. 5. 23. This work, here designated H., is described in Dr. Abbott's catalogue as '4to., membr., s. xii., Florentius Wigorniensis: Chronicum ex Chronicis seu Historia Angliae usque ad ann. 1138 deducta'. It consists of 263 leaves (ff. 1–107,

¹ Flor. Wig. mon., Chronicum ex Chronicis, A.D. 449–1117. Continuation I, –1141. Continuation II, –1295, ed. B. Thorpe, Eng. Hist. Soc., 8vo, Lond., 1848–9. The so-called 'second Continuation' is the work of Taxster and Eversden and has no connexion with the Worcester chronicle.

² Mr. Petrie's text was meant to represent all the original work of Florence for the period 449–1066. To secure this the work of Marianus as exhibited by the MS., Cott. Nero. C. V., was apparently subtracted from the joint chronicle of Marianus–Florence in the MSS., C. C. C. Oxon. civii and Lambeth xlii, and the residue, for that period, printed.

1–156), written and rubricated in one hand of the twelfth century until the end of the annal of 1131.¹ This is probably where this copy was originally meant to conclude; and in this respect it is similar to the majority of MSS. of Florence containing the Continuation, with whose common version up to this point it substantially agrees. A somewhat later hand, perhaps of the thirteenth century, has, however, added a portion of the later text of the Continuation from the words 'Stella cometis' in the annal of 1132 to the word 'proficiscitur' in that of 1138. This addition, though omitting portions of the intervening narrative as found in the Corpus MS., contains no interpolations and nothing that materially conflicts with the version of that manuscript. Prefixed to the text are some, but not all, of the calendars and dissertations of Marianus together with Florence's descriptions of the Heptarchic kingdoms, lists of Anglican bishops and regal genealogies, the latter being brought down in the original hand to the later years of the reign of Henry I. This manuscript, which is somewhat inaccurately described in Hardy's Descriptive Catalogue,² formerly belonged to Lord W. Howard, who used it as the sole authority for his edition up to a point in the Continuation where the fuller text of Lambarde's manuscript began to overlap. It contains no break in the text at the annal of 1118, the words 'Huc usque author noster', &c., which appear in Howard's text at that point, being that editor's own insertion.

(ii) MS., Trinity Coll., Dublin, No. 503, E. 6. 4. This perplexing work is described by Dr. Abbott as '5×4, membr., s. xiii. vel xiv: Idem opus, abridged but with a fuller continuation', and quoted by Hardy³ as 'a compilation from various sources, amongst others from Florence'. This is hardly an adequate description. Consisting of 160 leaves in 12mo and measuring only 4 $\frac{3}{4}$ "×3 $\frac{1}{2}$ ", this manuscript contains as its principal work, ff. 1^{vo}–122^{vo}, a 'little chronicle'⁴ written apparently at

² Vol. ii, p. 130. For permission to inspect this and the following manuscript the thanks of the writer are due to Mr. A. De Burgh, Senior Assistant Librarian, Trinity College, Dublin.

Worcester, consisting mainly of short annals extracted from the Chronicon ex Chronicis and continued down to the words 'Romam ivit' in the annal of 1123. This 'Chronicula' is written in two hands, of which the first only contributes, ff. 1^{ro}-36^{ro}, an abstract of the lists and genealogies of Marianus and Florence. The narrative proper, ff. 36^{ro}-122^{ro}, is written throughout in a hand of the twelfth century. The work is rather more, however, than a résumé of the larger chronicle; it contains several additions of its own, of which perhaps the most significant is a lament in verse on the death of Bishop Wulfstan, in the course of which some information is gleaned as to the identity of the writer.¹ From the end of the eleventh century the extracts become fuller and follow more closely the narrative of the larger work, although a different and more guarded account of the death of William Rufus is recorded. After noticing the death of Florence s.a. 1118 and adding a note as to its own derivation,² the Chronicula rapidly concludes. That it was written at Worcester seems tolerably certain; that it is the work, if not the autograph, of the monk John, in the early part of the twelfth century, is an opinion which a more prolonged examination of the text would be needed to confirm.

The manuscript seems now to have changed hands. Continuing from the point where the Chronicula ends, an early thirteenth-century hand has appended a copy of the Continuation of which Gloucester appears to have been the source. From this Gloucester copy, here designated G., as exhibited in the MS. under notice, what has hitherto been regarded as the normal version of Florence's Continuator has been mainly derived. It contains however a number of interpolations. Of these the most significant are those which relate to Gloucester, viz. the death of Roger de Berkeley (1127), the resignation and death of Abbot William (1130-1), the nomination and consecration of Abbot Gilbert (1139), the visits of Stephen and Matilda to Gloucester (1138, 1139). But those which throw the narrative into most confusion are the intruded accounts of the Papal Schism s.a. 1137, Stephen's quarrel with the bishops, the defection of Miles of Gloucester, and the death of Roger of Salisbury s. a. 1138, and lastly the alternative date of the landing of the Empress. Considerable portions of the true text, which are only found elsewhere in the Corpus MS., Howard contrived to overlook; but most of the historically worthless interpolations unfortunately found their way into his and the later edition. The original source of G.'s text was probably a lost Gloucester copy of Florence and his Continuator into which these notices had been intruded by a monk of that house. This may have continued further than 1141 and was possibly the source from which Gervase copied.¹ That G. itself is original is unlikely; it contains numerous grammatical and other errors which only the unquestioning intelligence of an inferior copyist could have left on record.

The early history of the manuscript is not known. In the sixteenth century, however, it appears to have passed through the hands of Joscelyn,² Stowe, and Holinshed before coming into the possession of Lambarde in 1575. By the last-named it was lent and eventually given to Howard, who, for the purposes of his edition, combined its fuller text of the Continuation with that of his own MS., in the way already described.

(iii) MS., Corpus Christi Coll., Oxford, No. 157. This manuscript, C., which is discussed in detail in the Descriptive Catalogue, has long been recognized as the best existing copy of the work of Florence and his Continuator. Mr. Thorpe claims to have taken it as the basis of his text, but, as already pointed out, that can only have been the case to a very limited extent. He altogether omitted quite extensive portions of its text in the later part of the Continuation; presumably because the pieces in question do not appear in Howard's edition, which he was here following so unreservedly. The absence of these passages from the earlier edition was, however, an oversight on the part of Howard, since they are nearly all recorded in MS. G., that editor's principal source for the period in question. Though described as 'visions and marvellous tales' these omissions are undoubtedly part of the true Continuation, and their inclusion would have thrown some much-needed light on the question of its authorship and history. In the text which here follows, therefore, the majority of them appear in print for the first time.

The Corpus manuscript belonged to Worcester, from which fact its version derives additional authority. It is written throughout in a fairly uniform hand of the early part of the twelfth century until the annal of 1110 or thereabouts, when the writing begins to change imperceptibly. From this point to its end in 1140 the text appears to have been written in a very desultory way; the entries are irregular, the ink varies, and there are numerous erasures and interlineations. The chronicle proper is preceded by fuller lists, tables, and excursus than appear in any other copy. In the original hand these are mostly brought down to the early years of the reign of Henry I; later hands have continued them to the time of Stephen. These were only partly printed by Mr. Thorpe, who, on the principle of excluding everything derived from Marianus, contrived to overlook much that was the work of Florence; notably some chronological details which incidentally throw some light on the time at which Florence began to write.¹ In C, as in all other MSS. of the Chronicle, there is no break in the text at the annal of 1118, and little internal evidence to show where Florence's work concluded and that of the Continuator began. On the ground that Florence's death is recorded in the text under the year 1118, Bale, Howard, and later antiquaries assumed that his work ceased with the annal of the preceding year, a conjecture which has generally been accepted, but which no evidence exists to prove. The text has been annotated throughout by three hands of the fifteenth, sixteenth, and seventeenth centuries respectively; their marginal additions are indicated, with their date, in the footnotes to the text below.

For the later part of the Continuation, the three manuscripts above described, together with some sixteenth-century copies derived from them, are the only sources; no other MS. of Florence being continued further than the year 1131. As to the respective merits of their versions of the Continuation there can be no question. C. is the most accurate and the earliest: if not the actual autograph of the Continuator John, it may certainly be pointed to as a working copy written out for his use and revised by his own hand.¹ H., though fragmentary, is reliable enough as far as it goes, and, up to the annal of 1131, one of the earliest transcripts of the original. G. is the latest of the three and most inaccurate; although loaded with interpolations, it nevertheless omits many fragments of the text which give local colour and a personal touch to the narrative of C.

The remaining MSS. which contain the Continuation need not be discussed in detail. The most important are the MSS. Lambeth No. 42 (L., an Abingdon copy), Bodleian No. 297 (B., a Bury copy), Corp. Chri. Coll., Cambs. No. 92 (CC., a Peterborough copy).² In each of these the Continuation ceases at the year 1131 and their collated versions substantially agree. This common version of the Continuation ceasing at 1131 is also to be found in the thirteenth-century copies embodied in the Memorale of Walter of Coventry.³

The history and authorship of the Continuation and the relations of the various manuscripts constitute something of a problem. Wherever it ended the work of Florence appears to have been carried on contemporaneously at Worcester by the monk John⁴ and concluded at the year 1131. Copies were then made at other monasteries. Subsequently, however, between the years 1139 and 1154, one of the texts, possibly C. itself, must have been re-written from the annal of 1128 by the author,

² L. is the earliest of the three and closely related to Howard's MS. H. It contains some additions relating to Abingdon which Mr. Thorpe includes in footnotes to his edition. After 1131 CC. copies Henry of Huntingdon. For permission to examine the last-named and other Parker MSS., the writer is indebted to the Master and Fellows of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, and especially to the kindness of Mr. C. W. Moule, Fellow and Librarian of the College.

who in the meanwhile, as he himself says, had been away from the monastery and evidently had collected new material.

Of the authority of John of Worcester as a chronicler it is possible to speak with praise. Though occasionally fantastic in style and exhibiting a fondness for the miraculous, he has nevertheless a great respect for truth, in more than one instance refusing to credit current rumour. Throughout the Civil War he is a friend, a somewhat candid friend, of Stephen, to whose faults he is far from blind. It is evident from his narrative that he came into contact with persons of high authority. So far from being a muddler, he gives an accurate and consistent, though restricted, account of the principal happenings of the period with which he deals.

[By the kindness of Mr. H. W. C. Davis, the writer is able to add the following notes relating to John of Worcester:] ‘John was certainly at Worcester in the year 1132. In a passage omitted in previous editions, he relates, under this year, the death of the precentor Uhtred, who “loved me like a foster-father”, and says “lateri eius stans adherebam” (fo. 384). About the year 1134 John was “in exile” in Winchcombe Abbey; during his residence in that house he conversed with the royal physician Grim bald, from whom he learned some anecdotes about the dreams of Henry I, which he records under the year 1130 (fo. 383-5). Whatever the cause of his stay at Winchcombe, John had returned to Worcester by the month of November, 1139; he speaks of himself as being present at divine service in the Cathedral when the approach of a hostile force from Gloucester was announced (fo. 394). The later part of the Continuation, from 1128, was written by John after the death of Henry I. This is shown by the rubric to his account of the Great Council of that year, in which homage was done to Matilda: De iuramento iam mutato in periurium; and by a reference, under the year 1130, to King Stephen “qui nunc imperat” (fo. 383). In the annal for 1134 he speaks of Henry of Winchester as “non tunc sed nunc Romanae aeccliae legatus”—a remark which shows that he was writing after March 1, 1139. At the same time the large number of precise dates which John gives may be taken as a proof that he worked from notes made contemporaneously with the events recorded.

‘Of John’s characteristics as a writer little need be said. When his work has been stripped of later accretions, his partiality for Stephen is unmistakable. He admits that Stephen's supporters had committed perjury in breaking their oath to Matilda ; he would even blame Stephen "si non vererer regiae maiestati caput Iohannis condemnari". Nor does he extenuate the weakness of the King's policy towards the Welsh, a subject on which it was but natural that a native of the Marches should feel strongly : "Iam in pluribus locis" he remarks under the year 1136 "et maxime in Walia depopulatio et depredatio minime cessat. Hinc conicere quis poterit quod mediocri prudentia imbecillique fortitudine et magis iniustitia quam iustitia a quibus regi deberet regitur Anglia". He reflects even more explicitly upon the King in a later passage (fo. 393) : "rex est pacis, et o utinam rex rigoris iustitiae conterens sub pedibus inimicos et aequa lance iudicii decernens omnia, in robore fortitudinis conservans et corroborans pacis amicos." None the less Stephen is to him "rex magnificus", "rex pietatis et pacis" (fo. 390, 392). The objective character of his narrative prevents this partiality from affecting his value as a historian ; he busies himself as little as possible with the motives of political personages ; his business is simply to record events from day to day. Where he deviates from his task as an annalist, it is that he may record an edifying vision or miracle, the last hours of a fellow-monk or some remarkable natural phenomenon. He has a predilection for doggerel verse and his grammar is defective. He shows some interest in chronology—it would be strange if a pupil in the school of Marianus and Florence did not : and he is capable of quoting a tag from Terence. But otherwise he shows no sign of education. He belongs to the class of local chroniclers and has no pretensions to rank with the leading historians of his age, with William of Malmesbury or Henry of Huntingdon or the last of the Peterborough writers.'

The text of the Corpus MS., C., is given in full in the following pages from the annal of 1118. It has not been thought advisable to encumber it with detailed collations from the other MSS., but the principal variations of Howard's manuscripts G. and H., and as far as possible the arrangement of their narratives, are indicated in footnotes to the text. For the full text of the more lengthy interpolations of the MS. G. the reader is referred to the pages of Mr. Thorpe's edition, where they are retained.

PREFACE

For access to the manuscript C. and for permission to reproduce its illustrations, the best thanks of the writer are due to the President and Fellows of Corpus Christi College, Oxford, and especially to Mr. R. W. Livingstone, Fellow and Librarian. To Professor F. Liebermann he is much indebted for his kindness in placing some valuable notes at his disposal and in lending the weight of his learned opinion on several doubtful points. Mr. R. J. Whitwell kindly assisted him with some obscurities in the text. Above all, he is indebted to Mr. H. W. C. Davis of Balliol College, who was the first to indicate the nature of the irregularities in the older texts, who brought them to his notice and kindly supervised the proof-sheets of the present edition.

Cui presidebant duo metropolitani, Willelmus Dorubernensis, Turstinus Eboracensis, episcopi, abbates, comites, barones, cum totius Angliae primoribus. Ubi de pluribus plurimis tractatis, quis, de medio facto rege et herede carente, in regendi regni statum succedat, communis consilio tractatur. Tandem ad velle regis consentiunt omnes, ut illius filia, Romanorum imperatoris Heinrici relicta, cum legitimo suo, si habuerit sponso, in Christi brachio regnum Angliae sustineat. Et ut huiusmodi consilium stable permaneat, ab omnibus fit iuramentum. Primo omnium iurant archiepiscopi², sicutque per ordinem episcopi, Rogero Saeresberiensi presule diiudicatore omnium existente. Post episcopos more aecclesiastico, licet omne iuramentum a Domino sit prohibitum, abbatibus foret iurandum. At quoniam, a seductis in invio sepius vilipenditur cucullatus, sequitur ordo preposterus, non necessario, sed pro velle commutatus. Iurat rex Scottorum David; iurans etiam Anglorum regina filiae regis quae in presentiarum erat iuratae prerogativa eo pacto assensum dedit, ut si rex in utroque sexu careret herede, si vero non in utroque, superstes qui foret regnum hereditaret. Rotbertum regis filium comitem Glocestrensem ad sinistrum pedem regis sedentem diiudicator allocutus, 'Surge,' inquit, 'surge et pro regio velle iuramentum effice.' At ille, 'Maior me,' inquit, 'natu prius id agat Stephanus comes Bononiensis,' hic ad dextrum pedem regis sedens. Quod et factum est. Iurant postmodum omnes comites, barones, vicecomites et quique nobiliores milites. Quo facto, diiudicator exclamat, 'Abbes procedant; iuramentum faciant.' Tunc exurgens vir reverendus abbas de Sancto Eadmundo nomine Anselmus respondit pro omnibus, graviter ferens in se et in socios prepostorum ordinem iuramenti factum. 'Ecce,' inquit, 'O rex, opprobria exprobrantium nostro ordini ceciderunt super nos. En contra ius aecclesiasticum vilipensis abbatum personis, laicales personas etiam nobis homagio subactos tuo iuramento preposuisti.' Ad hec rex, 'Est quod iam factum stet sicut cernitis actum. Fari cessate, mora nulla sit, appropiate, iuratoque vos, ut nos iuravimus omnes.' Abbates iurant; regem placent quia curant. Finito concilio, discessum agentes quique redierunt in sua.

Inter haec venere quidam qui in clamati fuerant, et mox in eorum adventu omnis lux illa penitus est extincta, nisi paucissima ipsius vestigia quae vix in parte aquilonis tenuiter poterant videri. Qui autem prius prefatam lucem vidiit, duas etiam in initio visionis lineas quasi aurorali luce plenas ab aequinoctiali solis ortu usque ad aequinoctiale eius occasum porrectas aspexit, sed pro pavore quem inde incurrit¹, et pro altera de qua dictum est visione cui totus intendit, neque quantum illae prefatae duae lineae duravere, neque quando discessere potuit agnoscere. Visa sunt ista in castello Herefordensi a clericis Sancti Guthlaci. Visa sunt etiam a vigilibus Brecenaeunensis castelli; insuper in pago Herefordensi a pastoribus in ipsa nocte super gregem suum vigilantibus. Quae didici scripsi, salvet nos gratia Christi.²

Alarming experiences of King Henry in Normandy.
A vision of infuriated rustics.

Another vision of armed and threatening knights.

Heinrico Anglorum regi Normannie moranti, anno regni xxx^o., aetatis vero lxiiii^o., miranda in somnis apparuit visio. Triplex erat visio et a se diversa. *Prima visio.*³ Sopore gravatus rex obdormit, et ecce plurimam rusticorum multitudinem cum rusticis instrumentis propter astare cernit. Omnes in illum diversis modis sevire, dentibus frendere, et nescio quod ab eo debitum exigere. Somno territus evigilat, nudis fortasse pedibus strato exilit, arma capit, eis quos somnians viderat vindicta inferre cupit, sed neminem invenit. Quo viso, qui regium latus observare debuerant fugiunt omnes. O qualis regia dignitas. En rex purpuratus cuius iuxta sententiam Salomonis terror est ut rugitus leonis a rusticis terretur in somnis. Cessa, rex, cessa neminem persequi, ad lectum redi, et ut maiora videoas rursus obdormi. *Secunda visio.*⁴ Reductus in soporem, conspicit loricis indutam numerosam militum cohortem, galeas capitibus ferentem, lancea, maceram, tela, sagittas manibus tenentem. Cerneret quisquis adesses, milites per somnum visos quasi velle regem occidere et in frusta si valerent concidere. Nimio rex terrore rex percusus in sopore, regiam totam horrendo replet clamore. 'Succurrite,' inquit, 'succurrite.' Sic clamitans, somnum oculis excutit, et prosiliens, gladium arripit, et affectans vulnerare, neminem vulnerat.

- fo. 383.* Astant pontifices, abbates, necne priores, ceu perquirentes res aeccliae spoliatas.¹ Tertio satisfaciens rex somno, archiepiscoporum, episcoporum, abbatum, decanorum sive priorum aspectat personas, cum baculis pastoralibus astare. Intellectu perspicaci coniceres animum illorum in quendam transisse affectum et velut ob direptionem rerum aeccliae suae manentem regiae misericordiae respectum. At personae considerantes terrificum habitum illius et quasi avertentem oculos ab eis minitando plurima, baculorum cuspidibus eum appetere velle visi sunt. Haec mira videns vidit quidam in regiae aulae secreto angulo latens, scilicet sub nocturno tempore omnia tegit silentio. Erat itaque iste medicinae artis peritus, Grimbaldus nomine, qui apud Wincelcumb, me presente et audiente, narravit haec omnia domino Godefrido² eiusdem aeccliae abbati. Summo diluculo regem adhuc lecto cubantem idem vir adit, questionem de his quae viderat cum eo facit. Cui rex cuncta quae in somnis pertulerat enarravit, quae illae (sic) ut vir illustris prudentiae sed iam de medio factus, in vera conjectura exposuit, et ut Nabuchodonosor iuxta consilium Danielis egit, elemosina peccata redimere commonuit.³

Actum est⁴ post haec in uno dierum rex idem Heinricus Angliam redditurus, cum regali curia in navim ascendit. Et ecce motus magnus factus est in mari, ita ut navis operiretur fluctibus, erat enim eis ventus contrarius. Proh dolor, Iesus dormiebat omnibus. Veritus rex imminentis funis, ut Rex regum in misericordiis evigilet sibiisque suisque suc(ur)rat, in regno Angliae Danicum tributum vii^m. annis non exigi decernit.

In qua cum modicum tempus exegisset, infirmitate corruptus, obiit. At filia eius pro eo quod necdum dimidia penitentia peracta defunctus esset, graviter afflita diebus ac noctibus in ieuniis, vigiliis et orationibus pro redemptione animae Domini misericordiam implorabat. Quod dum ageret, nocte quadam angelus Domini per visum ei assistens, ait, 'Si diligenter quam facis pro anima patris tui Dominum oraveris, cito ad corpus suum revertetur, ut iniunctam sibi penitentiam expleat, eaque peracta in bona conversatione denuo migrabit a corpore.' His dictis, angelica visio disparuit. Illa autem protinus evigilans, et quae per visionem audierat mente pertractans, cepit modis omnibus quibus poterat, ieuniis, vigiliis et precibus Dei misericordiam implorare ut, sicut angelus ei promiserat, patrem suum recipere mereretur. Quod dum aliquantum temporis in huiusmodi afflictionibus peregisset, ecce die quadam coram omni familia qui defunctus fuerat aulam intravit, sola indutus camisia, salutatisque omnibus qui aderant ne timerent hortatur. 'Ecce,' inquit, 'Deus omnipotens reddidit mihi vitam, ad peragendam penitentiam.' Subsequenti vero die peregrinationem aggressus, postquam legitimam explevit penitentiam, domum regressus, aecclesiam in honore Sanctae Dei genitricis Mariae construxit, in qua sanctimonialibus ad serviendum Deo congregatis, filiam suam Odiliam, iamdudum divinitus illuminatam, abbatissam constituit. Postmodum domu sua in omnibus ordinate disposita, sicut angelus predixit, in pace quievit. Camisia vero qua induebatur dum familiae suea vivus apparuit, in eadem aecclesia ad indicium huius miraculi iuxta principale altare posita servatur, gravissimo foetore respersa, et ad instar favillae colorata. Cum igitur rex predictus circa maris litus transfretandi causa moraretur, vento sepius ad transfretandum existente secundo, tandem die prefato circa meridiem cum ad mare transiturus perrexisset, suorum ut mos est regibus constipatus militum turmis, subito in aere nubes apparuit, quae tamen unius eiusdem quantitatis per universam Angliam non comparuit. In quibusdam enim locis quasi dies obscurus videbatur, in quibusdam vero tantae obscuritatis erat, ut lumine candelae ad quodlibet agendum ipsa protecti homines indigerent. Unde rex latusque regium ambientes et alii complures mirantes, et in caelum oculos levantes, solem ad instar novae lunae lucere conspexerunt, qui tamen non diu se uno modo habebat. A vision respecting the tomb of the deceased abbot seen by a monk of Tewkesbury.

De visione quam de abbatे vidit quidam Michael nomine monachus sanctae Teodekesberiensis aecclieiae. Nocte dehinc iii^o. migrationis eius e seculo, cuidam Theodekesberensi cenobitae, Michael vocabulo, quieti in stratu talis de illo ostensa est visio. Visum sibi est videre se in aecclieia fuisse, ante sanctum altare stetisse, orationi prolixae incubuisse. Qua finita, dum reditum ageret per claustrum, aspicit lumine repletum totum capitulum, in quo erat abbatis sepulcrum. Appropians et introspiciens, vidit plurimam virginum multitudinem circumsedentem, stolis albis amictam, ardentes lampades manibus tenentem. Et quia cultus iustitiae silentium est, non vox aliqua, nec musitatio inter illas audiebatur. Gubernatrix virginum illarum sole splendidior visa est, lucidissimam lampadem in manibus ferens, abbatis loco presidebat. Et forte maris stella fuit haec benedicta puella. Quae quia regularis disciplinae preceptrix est et domina, et bene novit ordinem quo cenobitae cuilibet non licet loqui post completorium, omnino dignabatur frangere silentium. Signum facit ad proxime sibi dextra levaque sedentes virgines, signo mandans, ut surgentes ad sui capellani tumulum vadant, et quam reverenter ibidem se res habeat diligenter considerent. Cuius iussis obtemperantes surgunt, locum sepulchri visitant, levique motu revoluto lapide intus aspiciunt, et omnia convenienter parata conspiciunt. Recluso tumulo, amplexo mento dextera signo hunciant omnia in summa reverentia completa de capellano suo. Sic disparuit visio, et ut credimus Imperatrix reginarum et Salvatrix animarum cum speciosis pedissequis suis summi Regis, beatissimae ac dulcissimae suae proliis, stellato se recipit solio. Godefridus abbas Wincelcumbensis aecclieiae obiit.

Inter Lotharium Romanorum imperatorem et Rogerium Apuliae ducem oritur bellum. Stephen captures Bedford castle, whence, hearing of the irruption of the Scots, he proceeds to Northumberland. He repulses the Scots and returns. Enormities in the North; fresh invasions by the Scots.

Death of the anti-pope.

Emensis festivis diebus Dominicæ Nativitatis, rex Anglorum S., ut nominis sui coronam regaliter teneat, sicut prius Exanceastræ, sic Bedf ordense castellum sibi adversum cum exercitu obsedit et cepit. Audito postmodum nuntio de hostium irruptione, terrarum devastatione, villarum concrematione, castellarum et oppidorum obessione, in manu valida Norðymbriam proficiscitur¹. Quo non diu moratus, vix ad velle suum pro quibus ierat peractis, rediit. Ferunt qui neverunt a pluribus diversæ gentis hostibus fere vi². mensibus indicibilem factam irruptionem in Northymbria et per loca longe et prope adiacentia. Capiuntur quamplures, spoliantur, incarerantur, cruciantur, viri aëcclesiastici pro rebus aëcclesiae neci traduntur. Numerum occisorum ex nostra vel illorum parte vix quis valet enumerare.

Defuncto apostolico viro Petro Leone, successit Innocentius, ad satisfactionem venientibus cunctis qui in parte Petri contra eum tenuerant,³ et pacificatis in omnibus. Qui, videlicet apostolicus, die Pascali Rome consecravit in episcopum Ostiensi aëcclesiae Albericus abbatem Verzelliensis aëcclesiae.

Quomodo Zabulus, in dolo malignitatis suæ captus, in puerili forma monachus sit factus. Inter haec fama volarat per circumitum hoc factum miraculum : In archiepiscopatu Treverensi cenobium nobile situm est, quod Prumia dicitur, in honore Sancti Petri et Pauli dedicatum, antiquis temporibus a Pippino rege Francorum patre Karoli Magni fundatum, in qua talis rei novitas ab omnibus ibidem conversantibus accidisse refertur : Quodam mane, cum cellararius eiusdem monasterii cellam vinariam, ut vinum ad altaris sacrificium more solito daret, cum famulo suo intrasset, repperit unam de cupis, quam hesterna die plenam reliquerat, usque ad foramen obicis, qui usitato nomine spina seu pessulum dicitur, evacuatam, et vinum per totum pavementum diffusum. Qui graviter de dampno quod acciderat ingemiscens, famulum qui astabat asperime increpavit, dicens eum preterito vespere minus diligenter obicem firmasse, ideoque dampnum huiusmodi contigisse. Et his dictis sub interminatione precepit ei ne alicui diceret quod acciderat; veritus ne si abbas hoc animo perciperet, contumeliose eum officio suo privaret. Facto autem vespere, priusquam fratres irent cubitum, cellarium intravit, obices vasorum in quibus vinum habebatur diligentissime firmavit, clausoque ostio, lectum petit. Mane autem facto, cum cellarium sicut consueverat intrasset, vidi aliam cupam usque ad meatum obicis, sicut pridie, vino defluente, vacuatam. Quo viso, cuius negligentiae dampnum hoc imputaret ignorans, graviter non sine magna ammiratione indoluit, famuloque suo ne cuiquam proderet quod acciderat denuo precipiens, priusquam vespere lectum peteret, omnes obices cuparum diligentia qua potuit muniens, tristis et anxius stratum adiit. Surgensque diluculo, aperto cellario, vidi de tertia cupa pessulum extractum et vinum usque ad foramen effusum. Unde non immerito super his quae acciderant perterritus et diutius commune dampnum silere metuens, ad abbatem festinavit, eiusque pedibus provolutus, quae viderat per ordinem intimavit; qui, habitu cum fratribus consilio, iussit ut obices vasorum quae vinum habebant, advesperascente die, crismate circumlinirentur: quod et factum est. Illucescente autem die, predictus frater ex more cellarium ingressus, repperit puerulum nigrum mirandae parvitatis in uno de pessulis manibus herentem; quem festine comprehendens et ad abbatem deferens, 'En,' ait, 'domine, puerulus iste quem vides, omne dampnum quod in promptuario pertulimus, nobis intulit.' His dictis, retulit ei qualiter eundem puerulum in obice pendentem invenit. Abbas autem, eiusdem pueruli qualitatem ultra quam credi potest admiratus, accepto consilio, monachilem habitum ei parare iussit et cum scholaribus puerulis in claustro conversari. Quo facto, puerulus idem sicut abbas iusserat scolares pueros nocte dieque comitatur, nunquam tamen cibum aut potum sumebat, nulli publice aut privatim loquebatur; aliis nocturnis aut meridianis horis quiescentibus, ipse in lecto residebat sine intermissione plorans et singultus creberrimos emitens. Inter haec, abbas quidam alterius ecclesiae orationis gratia venit ad eundem locum, aliquantis diebus ibidem detenus est: cunque scolares pueri ante eum

Quod dum sepius ageret, abbas idem parvitatem eius ammirans, sciscitatus est assidentes sibi ut quid tam parvulum puerulum in conventu vellent habere. Qui subridentes, 'Non est,' inquiunt, 'domine, talis iste puerulus ut estimas'; et narraverunt ei dampnum quod eis intulerat et qualiter in pessulo cupae herens manibus inventus sit; seu qualiter se continuerit intrans et exiens inter eos. Quibus auditis, abbas expavit et altius ingemiscens, 'Quantotius,' ait, 'eum de monasterio expellite, ne maius dampnum vel gravissimum incurritatis periculum: manifeste enim diabolus est in humana latens effigie, sed, Dei misericordia vos protegente per merita sanctorum quorum hic habentur reliquiae, non potuit vos amplius nocere.' Protinus ad imperium abbatis eiusdem aecclesiae puerulus adductus est et cum eum monachili habitu spoliarent, inter manus eorum ut fumus evanuit.

Ubi quae in circumitu erant igne combustis, multiplicique preda animalium capta et abducta, ad Seropberiense castellum, quod Willemus Alanii filius adversative tenuerat, obsidendum, multitudinem militum secum in mare cepit. Praecognito autem regis adventu, idem Willemus cum uxore et filiis et quibusdam aliis latenter fugam init, relictis in castello qui sibi in non reddendo illo fidelitatem iuraverant. Obsesso pluribus diebus castello, ad id expugnandum, ut ferunt qui neverunt, talis paratur machina. Con-geries non modica lignorum congeritur, adhibetur, castellina fossa iussu regis impletur. Ignis succenditur; fumus in altum se levat. Omnes infumigat et exfumigat. Regia vi porta aperitur. Decidentes vel derepentes de castello, fugam misere ineunt omnes; quos insequi et neci tradere regia mandat censura. Quinque ex eis viri nobiliores suspenduntur. Devictis hostibus, rex inde discessum egit, et versus Werham expeditionem movit. Dextris vero datis et acceptis, Radulfus Paignel cum rege pacificatur ad tempus¹.

Interea rex Scottiae David in gravi multitudine equestrium et pedestrium de vagina finium regni sui iam tertio egressus, circa terminos Norðhymbriae rura, oppida, et castella cremare et fere totam terram devastare. Sed iam hac ultima vice, cum usque Eboracum et Humbriam minaretur progressum, Eboracensis arciepiscopus Turstinus colloquium habuit cum omnibus de Eboraca provincia, fecitque omnes communi consensu et consilio iuramentum in regis fidelitate facere, ut ei resisterent. Inde autem rex Scottiae magis irritatus, a nullis dissuadentibus potuit cohiberi, sed veniens usque Teisam in die viii^o. Assumptionis Sanctae Mariae, quae feria ii^o. evenit, decrevit nostros preoccupare, quia in articulo ipsius diei maxima nebula erat. Et sic ex improviso se venturum super ipsos sperans, multas villas intactas reliquit, nec suos, sicut solebant, ipsa die aliquid ardere permisit. Nostri tamen tarde a quodam armigero premoniti, et pene preoccupati, citissime se armantes et ordinantes, sagittarios premiserunt ante primam frontem, a quibus valde Scottorum exercitus lesus est. Exinde ipsi regii barones cum militibus progressi, qui omnes de equis suis descenderant, et in prima erant acie, manus et arma cum hostibus miscuerunt, et in ipso primo puncto certaminis finem et victoriam fecerunt, cedentibus sibi Scottis et statim vel cadentibus vel cum maximo timore fugientibus. Nostri autem quia pedites erant, omnes et equos suos longius abduci fecerant, non diu eos insequi potuerunt. Alioquin et ipsum regem et filium eius et omnes qui cum eo erant, vel tenuissent vel morti dedisset. De ipsis tamen exercitu prope xth. milia in diversis locis ceciderunt, et ex eius electis usque ad l^{ta}. capti sunt. Ipse vero pro maximo timore et dedecore aufugit devictus. Cancellarius eius Domino') recording the nomination and consecration of the new abbot of Gloucester, 'electum nostrum dominum Gislebertum' (ibid.), afford the strongest clue that that monastery was the source of the faulty continuation of Florence from which G., Gervase of Canterbury, and the compiler of the Hist. et Cart. Mon. S. Petri Gloucest. (q. v. i. 18, 19) appear to have copied. The interpolator describes the nomination of the new abbot by Stephen as 'petente constabulario suo Milone', although he has already interpolated the constable's defection, vide sup. note 1, p. 51.

Quo auditio, rex Anglorum S. animo movebatur, et his qui marinos portus vigilanti cura observare debuerant indignabatur. Rex est pacis, et o utinam rex rigoris iustitiae conterens sub pedibus inimicos, et aequa lance iudicij decernens omnia, in robore fortitudinis conservans et corroborans pacis amicos.

Ubi autem novit ex-reginam apud Arundel ex-imperatricem cum grandi comitatu suo recepisse, graviter ferens, illo movit exercitum. At illa regiam maiestatem verita, et timens ne dignitatem quam per Angliam habuerat perderet, iureirando iurat neminem inimicorum suorum per se Angliam petisse, sed, salva dignitate sua, viris auctoritatis utpote sibi quondam familiaribus hospitium annuisse⁵. Mr. Round (G. de M., p. 278 seqq.), ignoring the 'Mense Octobri', points out the consistency of the earlier date with the subsequent movements of the Empress. But he is dealing with the interpolated narrative of G. whose chronology throughout is shown to be valueless.

vii^o. idus Novembris, feria iii^a, dum ad laudem divinam in aeccllesia fuimus, et iam primam horam diei decantavimus, ecce quod plurimis ante diebus auribus hausimus, exercitus magnus valde et fortis ab austro veniens, e vagina malitiaie progreditur. Urbs Glaorna armis militaribus instructa, equestri et pedestri exercitu innumerabili suffulta procedit civitatem Wigorniam invasura, vastatura, igne combustura. Nos autem timentes ornamentis sanctuarii, benignissimi patroni nostri Oswaldi reliquias, albis induiti, tota sonante classe cum humili processione foris extulimus, et ob hostium irruptionem de porta ad portam per cimiterium deportavimus. Adversarii conglobati, accelerando munimen quoddam fortissimum in australi parte civitatis propter castellum situm primum impugnant. Nostri fortiter resistere, et viriliter resistere¹. Hostes inde repulsi, quoniam olla succensa erant cuius facies aquilonis aquilonialis partis civitatis ingressum petunt. Nullo obstante munimine, hostium copiosissima, rabidissima et tota effrenis multitudo intrat, in diversis locis ignem edibus immittit. Proh dolor, comburitur non modica pars civitatis per loca, sed maior pars stando paret inusta. Suppellectilium diversarum in civitate, et in ruribus boum, ovium, animalium, et equorum fit maxima preda. Plurimi per vicos et plateas capiuntur, et velut in copula canum constringuntur, et miserabiliter abducuntur. Licet habeant, licet non habeant, quantum crudele os illorum censuerit in redemptionem sui iureiurando promittere et reddere compelluntur. Gesta sunt haec die qua intravit bruma, misericordia dubio sine dura. Iam predis captis, quampluribus edibus arsis, sic debachata remeant rabidissima castra, in prava cura tali nunquam redditura.

Tricesimo die mensis Novembris, comes civitatis Wigorniam venit. Combustionem civitatis ut vidit, indoluit; ad iniuriam sui, id actum fore persensit. Unde vindicare se volens, stipatus manu militum Sudlegiam adiit; audierat enim Iohannem Haroldi filium deserto rege ad Glaocestrensem comitem divertisse. Ubi quid comes egerit, si queritur, vix memoriae tradendum malum pro malo reddidit. In hominibus cum rebus eorum et animalibus predam egit et abduxit, et crastino Wigorniam rediit.

60 THE CHRONICLE OF JOHN OF WORCESTER

Archbishop Thurstan, February.Miles of Gloucester sacks Winchcombe, Jan.
31; but is repulsed from Sudeley.

King Stephen and the Earl of Worcester come to Worcester, whence the King proceeds against Little Hereford, while the Earl attacks Tewkesbury and devastates the lands of Earl Robert.

The King and the Earl return to Worcester.

The King proceeds to Oxford, thence to Winchester.

Milo ex-constabularius grandi adunato exercitu, ii^o. kal. Feb., feria v^o, Wincelcumbiam invadit, maxima ex parte villam combussit, predam egit, spoliatos rebus, ob exigendam ab eis, licet iniuste, mammonam iniquitatis, secum abduxit. Suthleiam inde divertit, dumque illam invadere cupit, regii milites qui in oppido erant resistere, et illum fugere compulerunt, cesis ut fertur de militibus eius duobus, et xvth. captis et in custodiam positis.

Rex et comes Wigornensis cum grandi exercitu Wigorniam venit, et evolutis aliquantis diebus, prius comes, post rex cum maxima expeditione Parvam adeunt Herefordiam . . .³ Morante itaque rege in illis partibus, comes memor iniuriarum civium suorum, in gravi multitudine armatorum Teodekesberiam invadit, magnificam domum Glaornensis comitis et omnia quae in circumitu eius erant, quorundam etiam aliorum⁴, igne combussit, miliario uno distante a Glaorna. Victus precibus domni abbatis Theodekesberiensis et fratrum, rebus illorum pepercit. Non modica preda capta, tam de hominibus et suppellectili eorum quam de animalibus, respectu mox clementi qui captivi ducebantur a vinculis soluti, ad sua redire iussit, et crastino Wigorniam rediit, contestans omnibus se in Normannia nec in Anglia tantam combustionem vix unquam peregisse.

Rex autem rediens Wigorniam ire perrexit Oxenofordiam. Supradictus Mauricius Pangornensi et Uhtredus Landavensi aecclesiae presules a Teobaldo archipresule Doruberniae, presentibus episcopis Herefordensi et Excecestrensi, consecrantur.

Rex Wintoniam veniens, consilio baronum suorum, cancellario suo

Consilio baronum regis Franciae Philippi et³ regis Angliae Stephani, factum est ut illius filius Francorum regis sororem acciperet in uxorem. Facta est desponsatio illorum mense Feb., in transmarinis partibus, matre regina Anglorum presente, et quampluribus viris nobilissimis ex utriusque partibus regni parte coram positis.

Miles quidam nomine Rotbertus, cuiusdam nobilis viri Huberti filius. Hic nec Deum nec homines veritus, sed totus in suis viribus confisus, Malmesberiense castellum cum suis dolii machinamentis invasit, regis militibus qui intus erant quibusdam in aeccliasiam sancti presulii Aldelmi velut in asylum fugientibus. Quos insecurus, quadam die cum suis armis militaribus constructis capitulum fratum intravit. Minis eos territans, salva tuitione facultatum suarum regiae dignitatis viros cum equis tradi sibi mandavit. At illi pacem Dei et beati patroni sui A. infringere veriti, iussis huiusmodi consentire renuunt. At demum licet invitati quo vesaniae illius satisfaciant, reddunt equos.

Diutius illo in castello morante, iam vastatis omnibus in circumitu, rex cum exercitu supervenit, et fere viii^o. diebus castellum obsedit. Willelm. d'Ipre, ut fertur consanguineus ipsius Rotberti, ad reddendum castellum utrinque internuntius fuit; idque tandem a rege optinuit, ut dextris datis et castello redditio, regio iuri omnia cedant. Quod et factum est.

Rotbertus vero ad comitem Glaocestrensem divertit, penes illum ad tempus in dolii veneno moraturus. Non multo post, quia nullatenus voluit intelligere ut bene ageret, sed ut sanguine sanguinem tangeret, ignorante comite, cum suis ad Divisas se contulit. Ubi, vel prius, iam facta conventione⁴ inter se et suos si castellum optineret, nemini unquam tradendum. Dolo malignitatis murum ascendit, regiis militibus qui Quarta dehinc die, vi et calliditate malitiosa turrim interiorem possidendam invadit; et singulis diebus ac noctibus, in extollentia cordis ubiubi omnia devastat, et mala quae poterat agere non cessat.

Tandem² ad Iohannem, illustris militiae virum, qui tunc in regis fidelitate Maellesberiense castellum observabat, divertens, ut suo consilio, immo insilio, consentiat et secum teneat, et non solum regi sed etiam comiti et quibuscumque poterat, in Satan fiat, minando postulat. Si nollet, sciret se ex improviso capite plectendum. O hominem dementem, velut in multitudine divitiarum suarum sperantem, et in vanitate sua prevalentem. At in abundantia virtutis suae non salvabitur.³ Respondit Iohannes, 'In virtute Dei quenlibet malo capere, quam ab aliquo capi.' Dixit et mox illum captum in custodiam posuit, vicemque pro vice reddens, omnia tormentorum genera quae in crudelitate sua prius aliis intulerat, in illum expendi fecit.

His omnibus auditis, comes Glaornensis et Milo ex-constabularius cum pluribus ad predictum Iohannem veniunt. Cui ipse comes D. marcas se daturum spopondit, eo pacto ut sibi Rotbertum ad statutum diem prestaret, ipseque sibi bonos obsides daret. Iohannes placatus pecunia promissas (sic) et obsidibus, tradidit illi R. eo tenore, ut infra xv^{im}. dies sibi redderetur. Hac conventione facta, comes revertitur Glaorniam, ducens secum R. Conseritur sermo de reddendo castello apud Divisas, quod spontaneo velle sibi tradi postulat. Abnegat Rotbertus ne iuramentum quod cum suis iuraverat in non reddendo scilicet castello infringreret. At ubi minis territus in patibili suspensione, spondet se cessurum petitis, dummodo periculum evadat mortis. Infra statutum diem conventionis, ille malignus R. ad prefati Iohannis reducitur presentiam, cui nuntiat comes omnia quae gesta sunt, quomodo minis territus R. promiserat se redditurum castellum. Rogat etiam denuo R.

² Tandem] In C. corrected from 'Non'. Dr. Liebermann points out that the numerous contemporary erasures and insertions in C. show that the author made a final recension of its text after other copies had been divulged; vide, inter alia, note 2, p. 58, note 3, p. 60, and note 1, above, where G. presumably supplies the original readings.

Fitz-Hubert makes overtures to John Fitz-Gilbert, but is captured by the latter and imprisoned at Marlborough.

Fitz-Hubert is temporarily delivered up to the Earl of Gloucester, to whom he agrees, under threats, to surrender Devizes castle.

Fitz-Hubert is led back to Fitz-Gilbert, ad Divisas secum ire permittat, eo pacto, ut si fortassis optimuerit castellum, iuri Iohannis sub eo subigatur. Annuit Iohannes precibus comitis, qui protinus cum R. reddit ad Divisas. Interim idem Iohannes, missis litteris ad eos qui extra vel qui infra castellum erant, iureiurando iuravit nec se nec comitem aliquid malefacturos Rotberto; hoc dumtaxat agant, ut iuramentum in non tradendo alicui castello firmiter teneant. Relictis ex-constabulario et quodam potenti viro Hunfrido et quibusdam aliis, comes Glaorniam revertitur, mandans omnibus ut si Rotbertus renueret sponte reddere castellum, suspenderetur¹.

Henceforth to 'crudelites', s.a. 1141, G., with its Cottonian transcript and Harleian translation, remains the sole authority. The interpolator's hand is still traceable, e.g. in the account of Stephen's capture at Lincoln, where his Angevin sympathies elicit the comment 'insto Dei iudicio', vide Thorpe, II, p. 129; John of Worcester has throughout favoured the king's cause, for which reason also the paragraph 'Et quia . . . praeocio', ibid., pp. 132-3, 'sicut ex ipsius Milonis ore audivimus,' is not likely to be from his pen.
